

Abstract

A method and a device for treatment of the exhaust of an internal combustion engine in which a fluid is used as an auxiliary agent for the treatment; a partial chemical conversion of the auxiliary agent is at least occasionally stimulated in order to produce a substance that 5 reduces the freezing point of the fluid when the temperature of the fluid falls below a critical value.